PLAYING SAFE.

"Why did you shoot this highway-man?" asked the policeman.
"In self-defense," answered the pedestrian with the big gun.
"But he was running away from you when you fired," said the officer.
"I know it," replied the other, "but I was afraid he was going to run around the block and attack me in the rear."

REVISED LAWS DECISION

SUPREME COURT'S RULING IN THE TOM PONG CASE—THE COMMISSION DID NOT EXCEED ITS POWERS IN REVISING THE LAWS AND THE LEGISLATURE ACTED RIGHTLY IN PASSING THE VOLUME EN MASSE.

The syllabus of the Tom Pong decision by the Supreme Court yesterday sustaining the method of passing and compiling the Revised Laws of Hawaii, was as follows:

The opinion of the court is by Chief Justice Frear. It says:

"The commission that prepared the Revised Laws was without authority to modify previous statutes so as to give them as so modified the force of law, but by Act 3 of the Laws of 1905 the legislature enacted the revision as a whole by reference and thereby gave the force of law to all of its provisions that could constitutionally be enacted by the legislature—even if the commission exceeded its authority in some instances in departing from the language of the original statutes or in inserting in constitutional form provisions that were previously unconstitutional.

"The Revised Laws were constitutionally enacted as a whole by reference by a separate short act. It was unnecessary, in order to give the force of law to new matter therein, to incorporate its provisions in the enacting act, notwithstanding the requirements of the Organic Act of the Territory that each law shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, and shall pass three readings.
"It was not true, indeed, that the legislature authorized the commission to prepare a mere compilation of former laws in their original forms. The long period that had elapsed since the last previous revisions of the laws, the many inconsistencies that had grown up during that period, the many changes that had taken place in the form of our government, and the extension of the federal constitution and laws to these islands, required numerous alterations to be made in the laws in order to make the compilation consistent and effective and enable the legislature to act wisely in case it chose to enact the revision. The act itself (Act 45, Laws of 1903), which provided for the appointment of the commission, also shows in its recitals and in its body that the necessity of considerable alteration was recognized. Various classes of changes were expressly authorized and the compilation was to be presented to the legislature at its next session for such action as it should choose to take. The commission, while recognizing its authority to depart from original forms, recognized also the limitations of that authority and as a rule when in doubt aimed to err, if at all, on the side of conservatism by departing as little as possible from the language of previous laws. This is shown by the work itself and by the report that accompanied its presentation to the legislature. The nature of the changes was described in the report and the particular changes were set forth in notes in the work itself. An act of the legislature was essential in order to give the text with its modifications of former statutes the force of laws.

"The act to enact the Revised Laws embraces but one subject and that is expressed in its title. It also passed three readings in each house. It therefore complies with the provisions of the Organic Act in question unless it is necessary to incorporate in an act in full, and not merely by reference, all that is to be made law by the act. The petitioner concedes that the act would be sufficient if, or in so far as, the Revised Laws contained only former laws without material change but contends that a body of law cannot thus be enacted by a separate act if, or in so far as, it contains new provisions. It is difficult to see why a legislature should attempt to enact a revision if such enactment would be operative only as to such parts as set forth former laws without change, and it is equally difficult to see why a legislature could not enact an entire revision or code that contained some material modifications of previous laws if it could enact a compilation that did not contain any new provisions."

Few persons have any idea of the requirements demanded of private soldiers in some branches of the regular army. The non-commissioned officer in the coast artillery must know more points in certain forms of applied mathematics than the ordinary well-educated business man, or professional man either, has any practical knowledge of. The practical working phases of triangulation, the use of a level, the taking of elevation, etc., are required of the private in the coast artillery before he is passed as either a first or a second-rate gunner. This grade renders him available for promotion to the rank of corporal or sergeant. In addition he must be able to handle the intricate machinery of the great coast defense guns and must understand the delicate mechanism of the various sorts of projectiles other than solid.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

NELSON TO LADY HAMILTON.

At a recent sale of autograph letters at Sotheby's, London, several letters from Admiral Nelson to Lady Hamilton were put up to auction. According to The London Standard, extremely characteristic is this further batch of Nelson's correspondence, which is almost entirely occupied with the two great passions of his life, his affection for Lady Hamilton and his hatred for the French. In one letter he says: "I am so miserably searick that I can scarcely hold up my head, but my last word and wish shall be, down, down with the French." In another he laments, "I am tired at not being able to get at the d—d rascals," while in a third, to "my own dearest beloved Emma," he rejoices, "I find myself within six days of the enemy, and I have every reason to hope that the 6th of June will immortalize your own Nelson." The conclusion to this letter, written off Barbados, June 4, 1805, is at once very characteristic and pathetic:

"May God send me victory and us a happy and speedy meeting. Only pray for my success, and my laurels I shall with pleasure lay at your feet, and a sweet kiss will be an ample reward for all your faithful Nelson's hard lag."

Another letter to Lady Hamilton, said to be one of the finest Nelson letters ever offered for sale, deals at considerable length with the writer's intention, "in case of any accident happening to me," to make a settlement on Lady Hamilton out of the Bronte estate, and concludes, "God in heaven bless you, my own dear Emma, and be assured that my only attachment is to you."
